When you become pregnant, your baby develops quickly: all the major organs are formed during the first 12 weeks of life.

During this important early time - and all the way through your pregnancy - your own good health is vital to your baby's healthy growth. That's why you should see a doctor or visit a clinic as soon as you think you may be pregnant, and then get regular followup medical care.

During your first visit, your doctor will give you a physical examination and laboratory tests done for any possible problems. He or she will question you about your history - especially about chronic illnesses, such as blood pressure or conditions that might need special attention.

The doctor will explain the changes happening in your body and how you can expect to
