When you were younger, you were always taught to do as you were told. However, once in high school, it was a time when you started making some of your own decisions. You were no longer spoon-fed your responsibilities, but on the other hand you were expected to fulfill them n your own.

Through the years, tim ou forme you own for pinions and what your you became more important. After the frigh hmen year, whe

"King of the Mountain" in middle school to being the lowest on the totem pole in high school, you progressed to a supposedly more mature person known as a Sophomore.

Finally getting the hang of things, Sophomores got more involved with school activities, joined a few ports teams, and in no time you became a Jun-search paper, and being able to drive were just a few of the things that kept the Juniors busy.

Walking down the halls of Plainfield five days a week you heard everyone talking about how they couldn't wait to graduate and get outta' here. But was that really what it was all about? Did students really feel like they just had to come to school and sit through their classes until the 2:45 bell rang? Until everything was gone, no one really took the time to appreciate the good times shared in those same halls. Within those four years of school we experienced everything together; from the momentous occasions like prom to the little things like homework. Diversity was between those walls and among those people.

6-Friends

First day of school and you walked into the cafeteria for lunch. Whom did you sit with?

Your teacher told your class that you were going on a field trip. Whom did you hang around with?

The answers to both questions were probably the same - friends, you know, those people who seemed to be able to take an otherwise boring day and make it bearable.

We all needed friends throughout high school. Even if they were just people to hang with at school, no one really wanted to spend four years alone.

For most of us our friendships went a lot deeper than just saying hi in the hallways. "I can always count on my friends for support," said junior Becky Reeves.

Part of being in high school was having fights with your family and dealing with issues such as divorce or death. In times like those it was nice to know that there was someone to talk to.

"My friends are always there for me no matter what. I really appreciate that," said senior Sara Schmitz.

There were certain things that only our friends could have helped us with, because they related so well. They knew the feeling of how your parents reacted when you told them that you failed your English exam. They understood because they took the same test and failed also, and it was only them who could say let's go celebrate our grades this weekend.

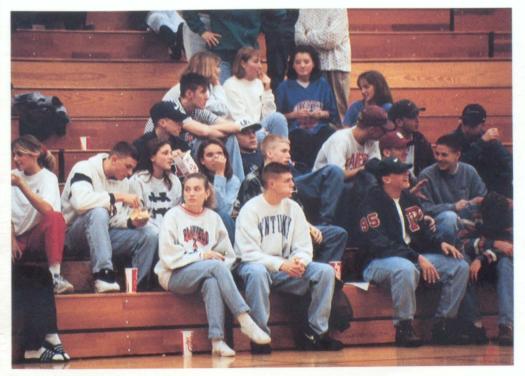

"My friends and I will always find something to do. Even if it is something stupid like running through our neighborhood with halloween masks on," said senior Melanie Alwardt.

There are times we shared with our friends that will be a part of us forever.

"I will never forget the time my friends and I rode through a corn field on motorcycles trying to push over cows," said freshmen John Hartung.

During the years that we shared in high school, we met all different kinds of people. Some of them were just people who we sat next to in class, while others were friends we could spill our guts to. Whether it meant going out on the weekends or just having someone to help you in English, having a friend was what made high school more enjoyable and a little bit more fun.

Long after high school we will have forgotten those who weren't big parts of our lives but we will always remember those who made it most memorable. By Stacey Lenz.

Friends-7

"Well, hello Dolly! Well, hello Dolly! It's so nice to have you back where you belong." Close to 50 cast and crew members walked around humming this tune for most of last fall. On November 17th and 18th Plainfield performed the musical "Hello, Dolly" in the Milo Aiken Auditorium.

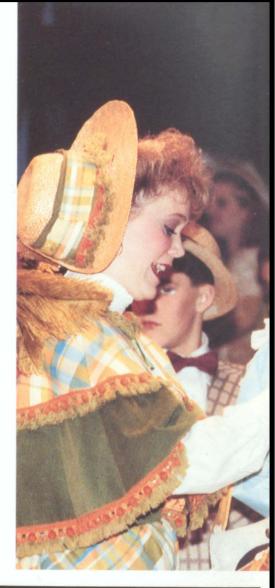

"Hello, Dolly" is the story of Dolly Levi (Hiley Smallwood) an older woman whose specialties are teaching people how to dance and fixing them up with the loves of their lives. Dolly decides it's time to remarry and sets her sights on Horace Vandegelder (Tony Craney) of Vandegelder's Hay and Feed. In the process of winning him over, Dolly manages to fix up two of her friends (Melanie Musilli, Mandy Helton), Vandegelder's daughter (Amanda Riddle), and his two clerks (Steve Hartley, Telly Rogers). Though mix-ups, arrests, and other problems plague the characters, all end up happily in love at the end of the show.

Hard work and a few changes went into the final product. Assistant principal Mr. Strauss helped direct "Hello, Dolly" allowing Mr. Sims to concentrate more on the musical aspects.

A brand new sound system was put to its first major test. It was the unanimous opinion of all that Hiley Smallwood did a wonderful job as Dolly. "She had the musical in the palm of her hand. She could either make it or break it. Obviously she made it," said Craney.

Others agreed, some sympathizing with the long hours of practice, the fact that Smallwood came down with mononucleosis, and the rumor that one of her costumes weighed nearly 40 pounds. Of course, there were the little things that one always comes away with when they take part in a performance. Chorus member Darlene Hernandez made many new friends, but she wished they'd had more time so she could have gotten to know even more people. There was also the occurrence of everyone singing the songs 24 hours a day. "I have all the songs stuck in my head. They just keep going round and round. But I suppose that's inevitable," stage manager Julia Horner said.

Many thought it was great to have been in a performance at all, especially one that practically sold out. If you look at the box office receipts, "Hello, Dolly" was a success, and if you talk to the cast members, the people that put it all together, you'll find it was the experience of a life time. -By Kate Skirvin

10-Weightroom

The strength training program changed dramatically over the past two years at Plainfield. The renovation of the weight room as well as new weights has made a big difference to the athletes, students and faculty members.

More people toned up their muscles either in the APC (advanced physical conditioning) elective classes offered to students, conditioning with a sports team, or simply coming in after school between 3:00 and 5:30 for a good workout.

Strength training had a positive influence on those who were serious about their physical and mental health.

Those students who had been doomed as skinny shaped up their bodies and increased their lean muscle mass. This increased discipline in students' lives and made them feel better about themselves.

Although lifting to develop lean, welltoned bodies was the main reason for many to participate in Plainfield's program, it wasn't the only reason. Improvement in energy and flexibility was acquired by those who worked out regularly.

"Power cleans helped improve my starts in swimming. I found I was off the blocks and in the water faster and further than I used to be," said Robin Gibbs of the girls' swim team. Sports teams found that lifting weights helped prevent injuries to their teammates and made them faster, stronger and able to put forth more effort.

"I didn't get to wrestle last year in sectionals or regionals or wrestle freestyle this summer because I tore ligaments in my knee. Mr. Vanderbush helped me by making a program to strengthen my knee and this year it hasn't given me any problems. I wrestled sectionals, regionals, and I even went to state," said senior Corey Haggard of the wrestling team.

The strength training program also did wonders for students' and teachers' mental health. In the weight room only positive comments were allowed and students encouraged others to work to the best of their ability.

"In the weight room we have tried to give as many athletes whether they were boys or girls opportunities to improve themselves. Many have taken advantage of the room regardless of athletic ability. There are many non- athletes and teachers who have also trained and it gives them a chance to improve their fitness levels, mental health and appearance," said strength training coach Vanderbush.

What did you think of when you saw the words Red Pride written across the jersey of a football player? Hopefully football wasn't the only thing you believed it stood for. As Coach Teany stated at a preseason meeting for the '94 football team, "Red Pride isn't just a football thing." What Coach Teany said was exactly right. Red Pride wasn't something only obtained by the football team, or just any other sports team for that matter.

It represented tradition, loyalty, respect, and was an attitude each student was expected to have for school.

When would have been a better time to celebrate Red Pride than at homecoming? First we participated in the tradition of the annual parade. People of the town stood in their usual places along the route to wait for and watch the passing of the fire trucks, floats, cars, and band members. Many kids stood patiently waiting for a cheerleader, student council member, or princess candidate to throw candy.

Next, Plainfield fans demonstrated loyalty as they cheered on the fighting Quakers during the game against Greenwood. Cheerleaders shouted, "Get up for the Quakers," and the fans responded on their feet. Even when the Woodmen gained control of the game and it began to sprinkle, parents, students, and returning alumni didn't seem to mind that they forgot their umbrellas.

Everyone waited to hear who had been selected as princess and queen. Tara Jordan, escorted by Ben Egenolf, was chosen to be the first princess for the class of '98. Sophomore Megan Linn escorted by Dave Harbison, and junior Chante Robertson escorted by Chris Walker were also excited to be chosen by their peers as princesses. Sarah Carver, with escort Shane Brown, was overjoyed to learn she had been crowned queen.

"Before I went out on the field I was having so much fun talking with Farrah and Ashley and all our escorts that I didn't get a chance to be nervous. I didn't think I would win, so I was in shock when I heard my name," said Carver. "Homecoming was probably my most memorable and proud moment and something I will never forget."

As the game ended with a score of Greenwood 19, Plainfield 7, the crowd emptied the stands and headed for the bonfire, while others went to find the dance.

14-Parade

Getting prepared for Plainfield's homecoming, classes came together to build their traditional float, dress for spirit week, and vote on their class queen or princess.

Almost everyone at Plainfield got pumped up for the big homecoming evening. For all of homecoming week, students broke out their wacky attire to wear during spirit week. Days included were hat day, red, white and blue day, college sweatshirt day, flannel day and camouflage day.

Then, every class had a secret place to meet to build the big float that was judged and announced at the homecoming game. The sophomore class's "Hit The Beach Boys" came in first in the 94-95 Homecoming.

"If you make the students think they can win, they will win" said Mr. Latta, sponsor of sophomore class.

Meeting at Plainfield Plaza before the parade started was a big part of homecoming. Participants in the parade including band, color guard, cheerleaders, class presidents, S.A.D.D., and queen and princess nominees of each class, all came together with friends and family to get their pictures taken and enjoy the ride down Main Street.

The parade was led by the fire truck with the varsity cheerleaders riding on top throwing candy to the people who watched. Not too far behind were the four class floats that were escorted through the town on the beds of pick-up-trucks.

Each class had the same amount of time, 12 hours, to work on their floats. The freshmen's "Hammer The Woodmen" was a good try for their first year.

The sophomores' float "Hit The Beach Boys" took the gold with their surfing man who moved as fast as he could. Much time and hard work went into this float, and it paid off in the end.

The juniors' "Burning Down The House" didn't quite win but was a nice try. Even though the smoke ran out the junior class still had a good time.

For the seniors' last year at Plainfield, their float "Nail The Woodmen" may not have taken first place but they'll have memories from when they won their sophomore year.

Homecoming night was a time for all different kinds of students. Float building, the parade, game, dance and bonfire gave a chance of participation to everyone. There are a lot of activities that go with homecoming besides the game, but float building and the parade was and always will be the students' favorites. -By Tisha Daubenspeck

Construction. That one word turned our school upside down and inside out in an attempt to make it a more beautiful place to learn. Out with the orange, red, and brown carpet of yesterday and in with the new, we said. Little did we know what we were getting ourselves into.

"I think they should have done the construction during the summer," said freshman Danny Stallard. That seemed to be the opinion held by many students and teachers as we threaded our way through hallways that had no ceilings and were occasionally blocked by ladders.

Inconveniences abounded as teachers were moved into different rooms to accommodate the reconstruction of certain hallways. What may have been the perfect schedule for a student could turn into a nightmare when they discovered they'd have to run to the opposite end of the building for English. "I think its an inconvenience to students because we're always changing lockers and classrooms but in the end it will pay off," said Brandy Clay, a junior. As the year wore on though, the shuffling of classrooms became more common place and easier to deal with.

Other problems arose in the form of a negative impact on the curriculum. "It's made it difficult to keep the curriculum going as I wished I could have," said English teacher Mrs. Kellogg. With the library closed at the beginning of the year, senior research papers were difficult to do. All materials had to be brought into the classrooms and the students could not use computers to find information on their topics.

But as we all know, the ends justify the means. From all the chaos emerged improvements that made the school a little nicer. The biggest renovation was the library. It almost doubled its floor space and the number of computers for student use shot up to 25 from 11.

The Biology rooms were another improvement. Instead of the work tables/ desks of old, students were provided with individual desks for class work and lab tables for labs.

Of course, in some rooms the only changes we noticed were new ceiling tiles. What we couldn't see was the new heating and cooling system beneath those tiles. We all prayed that we would all be able to feel the difference, but unfortunately the abrupt changes from hot to cold continued.

All considered we dealt with it well. After the first couple times our classes were tossed around, we settled into life and accepted the situation. By Kate Skirvin

18-After Hours

School wouldn't be school without the students, we all know that; but what we often took for granted were the teachers. Teachers not only taught our classes, they coached our teams, headed our clubs, and supervised our activities. Without them there wouldn't have been float-building, a newspaper, or prom.

Teachers stayed after school to help students with a variety of things. Some were coaches like Mr. Cavanaugh (boys' swim coach) or Mr. Lynn (girls' basketball coach). Others were club supervisors such as Mrs. Briggs the head of the art club. Ms. Carpenter put in many hours as supervisor for Student Council. Then there were teachers like Mrs. Brown-Frank who stayed after time and again to ensure that newspaper publications would get to the printer's on time. Some teachers came in early or stayed late to tutor students in certain subjects.

Teachers who stayed after school to sponsor activities were the ones who really touched students' lives. There was an unspoken agreement between all that if a teacher was willing to give up their free time to be at school, after hours, with a bunch of rambunctious teenagers, they must be kind of cool. This agreement founded a trust between many students and faculty members. "Mrs. Briggs gives me a new point of view on my life. She tells me stories that may help me," said freshman Eric Wood.

Teachers sacrificed many things in their dedication to their work. It wasn't unusual for coaches and supervisors to spend an extra four to six hours outside of class working with kids. In preparation for the play, teacher Mrs. Ray and Vice-Principal Mr. Strauss gave up many of their Saturdays in the name of set building. They gave up important family time and, as stated by Mr. Cavanaugh, there were times when some never got to see the sun.

So just why did these teachers spend so much time on extracurricular activities? Sure they were paid extra for their time, but most operated on other payoffs. "[The payoffs are] hopefully a successful season, and that any athlete that plans on competing learns that hard work pays off. That the athlete sees over a course of a season that he has improved by pushing himself. That it is not enough to want to win. More importantly it is the will to prepare to win that leads to success," said Cavanaugh when asked what motivated him to coach.

You can't have a school without the students, but it's obvious you can't have one without the teachers either. When students and faculty members came together in cooperation to make things happen, that's when we had a true school.

"Mrs. Briggs gives me a new point of view on my life. She tells me stories that may help me."

Hail to the Varsity, cheer them along the way ... Plainfield's school spirit was something that many tried and were successful cheer section at a game, you were most in improving throughout the year.

"I've seen many more Plainfield shirts in the past year. From June of 1993 to now, school spirit is definitely increasing." said Coach Vanderbush.

Part of the reason that he's seen so much more Plainfield apparel is because of the weight lifting club t-shirts. The Red Pride Booster Club made Plainfield tshirts available at a small cost for those APC students who made it into a bench, power-clean or squat club.

The Booster Club has done much to raise the school's morale. They gave specially made Plainfield t-shirts to each sports team that made it to sectionals, and sweaters to each individual state finalist.

People who have been around the school over the years have noticed we have more school spirit now. There are more people involved in activities, and more people taking pride in school.

"I've definitely noticed a change in the last ten years. The kids now will respect each other and say 'good luck' to each other. The kids aren't divided up into groups as much. I've seen more unity with school pride," said mathematics teacher

Ms. Sprowl.

If you were a student in the students' likely standing. Crowd cheers were popular at some of the games. The cheerleaders' invested in signs to hold up to get the crowd going but found that many times they got a bigger response when the students were in control of holding up the signs.

Signs weren't the only thing that got the crowd fired up. During home basketball games the lights went off and the spot light was turned on. It shone on the court where the Plainfield boys' made their entrance to the beginning of the song "Comma" by Guns-N-Roses.

As the team broke through the decorated hoop they were greeted by students who had formed a tunnel for them to run through. This is one of the ways school spirit will be remembered.

A newly formed group called C.A.S.S., (Committee to Advance School Spirit) hopes to make a difference. Along with the Red Pride Booster Club and the great student body there should be many things to look forward to in the future.

22-Helping Hand

In high school many of us were told that we were lucky to live here in Plainfield. The town had its minor problems, what to do on the weekends, but we didn't suffer the big city crime of Indianapolis and poverty wasn't an overwhelming issue. We lived a fairly sheltered life, but we saw what went on in the world around us and some chose to help.

Student Council sponsored many projects. As they did every year, the Council bought presents for a local family at Christmas time, and raised funds for Riley's Children's Hospital. They also took part in the Special Olympics and provided Santa and elves for the Kiwanis Club.

Honor Society enforced community service by requiring that each member perform one independent project and take part in a group project each year. Individual projects were usually smaller such as bringing a neighbor their mail or babysitting free of charge. In April, students took pledges for and participated in a walk to fight leukemia. Another activity that took place was a Halloween party for the kindergarten center.

Our local chapter of S.A.D.D. kept up the fight against drunk driving by drawing students together. Led by school psychologist Mrs. Thompson, the group participated in a school and county volleyball tourney, attended a Youth for Youth conference, and signed students up for the Prom Promise.

The R.S.V.P. got into the Christmas spirit of things and took presents and a Christmas tree to a needy family. "It kind of opened my eyes, really, because it made me see the way I don't want to be and that I'm really lucky I don't live in a town with a lot of poverty. The kids [in the family] think of the same things we do and they want Christmas just like we do. I'm just glad we could offer them a little hope," said senior staffer Greta Prether.

Then there were students who took the initiative and went out on their own. Some, such as junior Jason Tom and sophomore Mandy Helton, took part in the Handicapable Camp. This was a weekend camp for handicapped children to play games with older kids. Junior Sara Long volunteered her time at the James Whitcomb Riley Hospital for Children helping them with crafts and talking to them. "Knowing that I've helped these kids in any way is an inexplicable feeling," said Long.

Whatever our motivations were and whatever we chose our actions to be, each student that lent a helping hand made a difference. These differences were not always evident, but they were there and they mattered. By Kate Skirvin

Helping Hand-23

Emotional strife isn't an easy thing, and when you're on stage trying to get it across to an audience, it can be darn intimidating. This is what Plainfield's High School's cast of "Barefoot in the Park" found out in their preparation for the play. But have no fear, the cast of this Neil Simon play accomplished that feat and many more.

The play takes place in an apartment in New York. This apartment has some peculiarities such as the six flights of stairs one must climb to get to it and its plumbing which only works backwards.

Enter newlyweds Paul and Corie Bratter (Steve Hartley and Sarah Carver). Paul is a rising attorney at law and fits the bill perfectly, being completely levelheaded. Corie is a fiery young woman whose love for trying new things exceeds her husband's. Throw their strange upstairs neighbor Victor Velasco (Paul Helphinstine) and Corie's neurotic mother (Julia Horner) into the mix and an explosive situation is created.

After an evening of one too many new things, Paul and Corie have a heated argument culminating in a decision to divorce. Meanwhile, Corie's mother winds up sleeping in Mr. Velasco's apartment, waking up a new woman. Corie speaks with her mother and decides a divorce is not what she and Paul need.

The play ends when Paul, drunk, wanders out on the ledge of their picture window to prove his love for his wife. Corie then rescues him.

The spring play was under a new leadership, since theatre teacher Mrs. Murphy had left. The actors took direction from the new English teacher Mrs. Ray and Vice Principal Mr. Strauss. This was of course a major change, but new and veteran drama club members pulled together to make the production a technical and artistic success.

"Mr. Strauss made it easy to stay in character. I always wanted to be my best for him and for the other Thespians," said senior Billy Stafford. Senior Tony Craney acted as student-director for the second year running which helped keep things on an even keel.

Then there were the normal things that a performance does to a person's life. A play takes much dedication and time to be successful. "I couldn't get any homework done when I was around the stage. Everything about the production interested me too much," Stafford said.

Actors and stage hands alike felt the nervousness on opening night. "On opening night my hands were sweating. I had nothing to do with the acting, but I was nervous for the rest of the cast," said sophomore Ryan Craft. By Kate Skirvin

26-Transportation

From the time we woke up for school to the time we went to bed Plainfield students each did things a little differently. However, we all had one thing in common, the need to make it to school by the 7:45 bell.

The ways we got to school differed. Some walked, others found someone to take them, some rode the bus, and the lucky ones drove their own vehicles.

"I hate riding the bus," said freshman Danny Stallard. Most students found the bus the most uncool way to get to school, even though we all had to rely on it at one time or another. "I can't wait to get my license so I don't have to ride the bus," said freshman T.J. Rhoades.

Many students' modes of transportation would change after they were 16 and had completed the driver's-ed course. However, having a car wasn't all that easy.

There were some down sides to driving yourself to school such as paying for a parking permit, and unless you got your parking space about a half an hour before school started, you had to park in the very last row.

Anyone who got to drive to school knew that there was a lot of responsibility to having your own car. Some students had to pay for the car, unless they were fortunate enough to have parents funding them. Also the cost of gas, about $1.10 a gallon, definitely put a hole in students' wallets. Insurance had to be paid, which was priced much higher for teenage drivers. No matter the headaches and expense, having a car was worth it to have the freedom.

Usually the ones who had a car weren't alone in it, there was usually a friend that needed a ride. "A friend takes me along with three other people to school in this really small car that is really hard to fit all of our books," said freshman Zach Smith.

Some students, especially the ones who lived close to the school, preferred to walk. "I walk to school because it saves time and gas," said senior Kyle Busick. Other students said it was just a good way to get exercise. Of course, the weather wasn't always kind to them during the snow falls and rain.

With everything else that went on during high school, transportation was something often overlooked. However, when your sixteenth birthday rolled around the first thing on your mind was getting your license. After that it didn't matter what kind of car you could get, as long as you got one.

However, until that day came, there was always the twinkie mobile, foot, or bumming rides off friends. Anything to get to school on time. By Stacey Lenz

Spring break was here... and gone in a week that seemed more like a day. Even with Christmas vacation in December and fall break in October, spring break was considered by many to be the most awaited break of the year. Students and teachers alike went through the last week of March with much anticipation for the next coming week of worry-free relaxation.

One of the most popular activities by far was the migration to a warmer climate, Florida being the top vacation spot. From Plainfield there were a great many who took the annual trip to the usual party place, Panama City Beach. There always seemed to be an abundance of things to do no matter how many times you've been there. Parasailing, bungee jumping, driving two miles per hour down the strip or merely laying out in the sun and returning to the hotel room were just a few. Other students traveled elsewhere to find fun.

"I usually go to Panama, but this year I went to Fort Meyers because the senior girls wanted to spend our last spring break together without the rest of Plainfield," senior Amy Morris explained.

Belles and Beaux members went on a cruise to Nassau and Port Lucaya. "It rained a lot of the time. We went to Gilligan's Island and that was pretty cool though," said senior Rich McKnight. "Right after we did our show a bunch of us rented jet skis and we got in a wreck. We took a collection of the spending money we had, to foot the $200.00 bill for the jet ski."

The trip to get to the vacation spot and the ride back was sometimes one of the best parts of the week. Whether you opted to take a car, bus or plane there was surely a story to tell. "Thursday night before spring break was crazy because Darcie, Amber, Stephanie and I didn't know whose car we were going to drive. We ended up taking Darcie's Geo Storm and with four people and our bags, we were smashed in that car," said junior Maya Worman.

If you didn't travel out of state there was still more than corn in Indiana. Students who stayed home had fun doing things like watching movies, going out to eat, fishing or camping with friends, girlfriends, or boyfriends.

"I stayed home but I had fun. I was with Lisa all week and we went to the movies and out to eat. My band couldn't practice because two members were gone," said senior Josh Oldham.

The week after spring break it was easy to see that a tan was the number one trend along with tie dyes, beaded necklaces, bracelets, anklets, and hair wraps. By Stephanie Kurtz

30-Outside Activities

"Want to do something this weekend?" "Sure what is there to do in this town?"

Sound familiar? Most students found themselves having this conversation when the weekend rolled around. In the four years we spent in high school we did different things within our groups.

All of us went to one school and comprised one student body, but we were all diverse in more than one way. How we dressed, the music we listened to, or what we did in our spare time defined us. If one chose to look, there was much to do for all the groups that our school had. "In my spare time I like to hang out with my friends, listen to music, and go shopping if I have money. I also go camping and hiking," said junior Karen Murphy.

Unfortunately, if we wanted to do something a little different we usually had to go out of town. If it was some good ol' country music you wanted or to play pool, Mooresville was the closest place for action. The Junction, an under 21 club, and the pool hall were frequented by teenagers who were into the country scene.

While some went to The Junction and two stepped, others did the hip-hop thing at Club Key West. There you could dance or just hang out with friends.

On the other hand, if you were into a more alternative scene Broad Ripple was the place to be. It offered many choices with its eateries, shops and coffee houses. At night you could find local bands performing in many different places around the town.

Some people spent much of their free time working, but that didn't keep them from having a social life. "I usually work a lot so I don't have time to do that much stuff. When I don't work I go bowling, spend time with my friends, and go to concerts," said junior Dan Quilliam.

A few concerts that came to town and were popular with Plainfield students were Nine Inch Nails, Elton John and Billy Joel, and Boyz II Men.

Then there was the last resort—staying home. This was what we did when we either couldn't find anything to do or we just didn't feel like going out. Maybe a little bland in comparison to other activities; however, you could always have friends over, play games, watch movies, listen to music and talk. It was nights spent like this that often provided some of the best memories.

We might have changed the things we did, and the groups we did them with, but we carried on the teenage tradition of having fun. The goal of having fun, no matter where the hangout, was always foremost in our minds. By Jason Tom

The theme, Moonlight and Roses, kicked off the 1995 Jr./Sr. Prom. Whether you went with the person you sat next to in English class or your significant other, the evening of April 28th, 1995, was indeed "Unforgettable".

Taking advantage of the fact that school was not in session on prom day, the ladies managed to get in to the hairdresser as early as possible, while the gentlemen did some last minute arrangements. "For starters my tuxedo was too small and very uncomfortable. I guess it was because I'm not used to getting all dressed up," said junior Chad Hardin.

"I thought the coolest part of the night was riding around in the limo. We got to pick up the little phone and talk to our limo driver. It made me feel kind of important," said senior Justin Batton. When dinner time rolled around, the biggest worry the gentlemen had was whether they would have enough funds, while the ladies worried about not getting anything on their dresses.

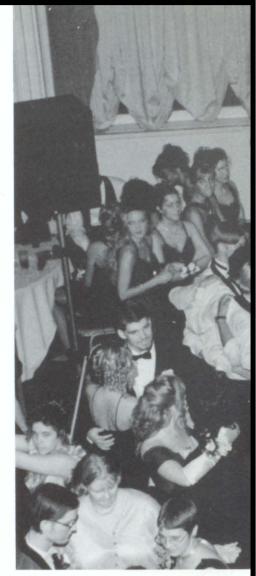

"My date and I went to Chanteclair. It was very elegant. For the quality of the service, the cost of the meal was worth it. Besides the green stuff they called dressing, and the artichoke hearts they put in my salad, the rest of my meal was pretty good," said senior Carl Rohrer. After the dinner experience, students were ready to head to the prom. Around 8:00 PM, the lobby of the Omni Severin started to fill with eager couples and individuals awaiting the beginning of the event everyone had been talking about for the last few months. Everyone knew this would be one of the most memorable nights of high school.

Finally 8:30 rolled around, the doors opened and everyone started forming a line. The months of preparation paid off when students were awed by the beauty of the room. After talking to friends and admiring others' tuxedos and dresses, it was picture time. Whether you were taking it by yourself or with your date, the embarrassment of everyone walking by and watching was unavoidable.

After pictures, people migrated down to the dance floor, while others spent time with their dates and friends talking. The balcony gave a complete view of the dance floor and was crowded with either students dancing or taking pictures.

"The best part of Prom was seeing everyone all dressed up. I had a lot of fun with my friends and it was all I expected it would be," said junior Tisha Daubenspeck.

Students raced into the future as they began what would be a long night that was filled with exciting games, and tables loaded with various prizes, and lots of fun.

After 11:30 hit, students left prom and went home to get out of their uncomfortable clothes. The top button on the tux that was a little too tight for him to breathe was finally undone, and the shoes that squeezed the girls feet so tight that they didn't think they could dance another dance were kicked off for good.

Jeans, sweatshirts, t-shirts, tennis shoes, and hats were all part of the popular and comfortable attire that was put on for post prom.

The race began at 12:30. A line at the door down the ramp and through the gymnastics room was how it all started off. From there students did their own thing. Some went straight to the games to get a head start on their cards. Others took a pit stop at the food line where pizza, subway, cookies, brownies, and drinks were all being handed out.

The west gym was packed with games of all kinds: scooter races around a little track, a putt-putt hole, basketball hoop, ring toss and shuffle board.

In the east gym there were all kinds of tables set up to be like a casino. There was black jack, poker, roulette and many other casino games. At the other end of the gym the prizes were set up on display to purchase with the money that could have been won when cards were filled up. Students could exchange their cards for raffle tickets to win some of the big prizes at the end of the night.

To take time out from all of the games some students went into the lobby to sit at tables or bleachers that were set up. Others went into the wrestling room to try and catch the Endira Low band who performed at 1:40 and 2:40 or the Fahrenheit band who also performed at 1:15 and 2:15. There was a great response to their music and everyone in the room seemed to be enjoying themselves.

By the time 3:15 rolled around most people that were left were considerably tired and ready for the raffle to be drawn. There were some prizes just the seniors could win, like an artificial tree that had $100 stuffed in the branches, refrigerator, T.V., V.C.R., and a toaster oven.

After the raffle was over everyone dragged themselves out of the gym to go home and sleep for just a few hours before getting right back up for the drive to King's Island. "During that weekend you may not get a lot of sleep, but it's all worth it in the end," said Darcie Venezia.

SENIORITY

sen'yorəd-e: hígher rank in the year graduating from secondary school

The turning of the tassle was a goal for every senior as they anxiously waited to see what their futures held for them. As seniors broadened their horizons, they achieved their goal to move on. Whether college was in their plans or just stepping right into the job market, the decision would influence their lives for years to come. Coming to this point of leaving classroom friends and the world of high school, they were all ready to start new lives and begin again. Before they knew it, their senior year came and went. Graduation was the time for growing up and realizing dreams can come true.

When the senior year came around, students looked forward to their futures and lived each and every day to the fullest. It was a time of fun, and anticipation. Seniors made the most of their days and looked towards June, realizing how very important it was that they planned for their future.

As seniors thought about the end, they placed more importance on themselves for what lay ahead. "Graduation is kind of a symbol of responsibility, but I'm looking forward to moving out and being on my own," said Greta Prether.

After graduation, many students headed off to college close and far away. Others headed off to a full time job, and started living day by day not as a high school student.

"After high school I will be going to college and I look forward to meeting new people," said Melanie Alwardt. Graduation signified leaving familiar faces, putting high school memories behind the realization that it was time to grow up a bit.

After graduation, some students started looking towards marriage. "I'm looking forward to starting my new life with my fiance and living in my new house," said Mary Howard.

No matter where everyone ended up after graduation, we had reached the goal, and it was now time to start new lives. Graduating seniors left the ceremony knowing that they would not be together as a whole class ever again, but on the other hand they knew they had accomplished something big--a sense of growing up. but not forgotten

Seniors realized it was time to move on and start their new lives on graduation day. But before graduating, many of them took the chance to leave a message to their close friends as most of them would be going in separate directions.

Memories were made throughout high school and the seniors realized how valuable a keepsake they were. Whether it was long days spent in class, hanging out together on the weekends, or perhaps vacations spent together; high school produced enough memories to last a lifetime. -By Leah Ping

Dedication and hard work equaled great accomplishments. A group of talented and motivated students used these two tactics along with their own ideas to become 1994-95's top twenty students.

Jeff Staley who was ranked number one and would be this year's valedictorian said, "To be number one takes personal commitment to go beyond what is expected, because without extra effort you don't stand out from the crowd."

Not being part of the crowd often times was reality for these bright students. In order to keep grades up, many had to sacrifice fun from time to time and devote it to studying. However, school wasn't all hard work and no play for them. Many of these students were also involved in extracurricular activities and found it challenging to stay on top and still be involved in activities for enjoyment. Dr. Saxman, head of the top twenty students, said how dedicated these students were to their goals.

This year the dinner for the outstanding students was held at the Adam's Mark Hotel on May 10. These students were awarded for their great achievements and the time and effort they put in their high school career. "I suppose it's a good thing to take the time to recognize those of us who have managed to keep our grades up all four years of high school," said Nathan Gilmour.

Work, work, work! All work and no play could have made seniors dull students. But these kids weren't dull. Even with all the school work they had, the seniors still found time to have fun. Many different things were on their minds, such as graduation, college, moving away, and being on their own. With all of these things building up, seniors couldn't help but make time for fun and relaxation.

Hanging out and being with friends was a popular way of relaxing. Looking into the future towards spring break, prom, and graduation were also ways these anxious students passed the time.

Senior lounge gave seniors the opportunity to sit back and take a break during the day.

No matter how seniors found a way to relax and have fun, it was a relief to them, and a way of enjoying their senior year.

Other activities seniors participated in to make their last year fun were extracurricular activities. Football games, basketball games, dances, and concerts were just a few of the many things seniors did to keep involved and to have fun.

"My friends and I love to go to games, and then go to the after game dances. We also just like to go hang out and do whatever," said Sarah Carver. This was the case of many seniors.

Seniors found fun outside of school too. Billee Jo Herrick said, "My youth group from church has kept my spirits up, and looking forward to graduation has kept my senior year fun." By Leah Ping

ap-tə-t-(y)ud: a natural ability; capacity for learning

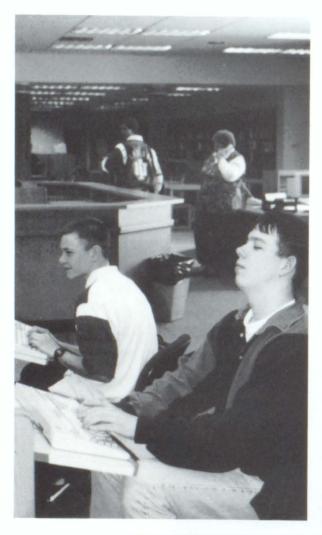

"Why were we here?" was an often asked question. Regarding high school, academics might have been an appropriate answer. We were here to put our aptitude to use, and pick up the knowledge and skills that would be useful to us in the "real world". However, Plainfield took academics one step further with field trips, hands on activities and better technology. So, what was academics? "Academics" was being chosen Channel 6's school of the month, adjusting to the changes in our school, and dealing with minor inconveniences. It was slacking off or striving to get that "A". Academics was more than just class, it was preparation for our future.

o much stress o little time

It was 10:00 on Thursday night and after studying for a major history test, you wrote your research paper that was due Friday. Then it dawned on you that you had 20 killer chemistry problems to do, an algebra test to study for, and you needed precious sleep to be your best in the game Friday. You've just been too busy to carry everything. Your parents threatened to take away your car if vou didn't keep your grades up. What could vou do?

As if sports, clubs, and jobs weren't enough for high school students to handle, homework could cause major stress. Adults as well as peers pressured students to do well. Teachers made certain times of the year worse than others. "Just around vacation time, it seems like all the teachers gang

Parents also added pressure when they threatened to take away privileges such as driving or staying out late. Henning Klatran, a

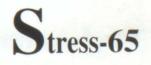

"You feel like you must make a good first impression because many people judge your country by the impression they get of you," said Henning Klatran about the pressure of being an exchange student.

foreign exchange student from Norway, felt a different type of pressure. "As an exchange student, you're expected to maintain good grades because you are representing your country. You feel like you must make a good first impression because many people judge your country by the impression they get of you."

Probably one of the strongest pressures felt came from inside. "I feel the most pressure to do well in school from myself," said junior Julia Horner. It was a feeling such as this that often gave the needed motivation to succeed.

There was hope in relieving this pressure and stress. Many students either listened to the radio, talked on the phone or watched TV while doing homework. Sophomore Stephanie Ader had a different method. "I sometimes yell at my parents and friends, and take it out on them." Everyone had their own way of surviving homework.

So, if you're freaking out because you have too much to do, just remember that you're not alone. Everyone felt the stress at some time. By MaryAnn Woodward

When most people thought of learning, their minds called up images of the time spent in dusty classrooms. Time which was only spruced up with the occasional lab or project, and furnished mainly with tedious lectures. But this was not so. The '94-'95 school year saw many field trips, and with programs for seniors like Peer Facilitation and Exploratory Teaching, opportunities for learning outside of class provided a great break from traditional classroom learning.

Taking Learning

Senior Tina Taber said, "Going into exploratory teaching, I really had no desire to actually have a career in teaching; I just thought that working with the kids would be fun, but after I took it, I really did consider teaching." Exploratory teaching was a program that gave seniors with an interest in the teaching field an opportunity to work with elementary and middle school students for a semester or a whole year. The students who had completed the course said that it was a rewarding learning experience. "The highlight of the whole thing was at the end, when I was getting ready to leave," said Taber. "All the kids had written a few sentences; advice to me about college. It was like a little book that they had written and bound up for me. It was really cute." Another course that had seniors working with younger students was Peer Facilitation, which was a "youth helping youth" program. Seniors who had already completed the orientation semester of the class were placed with elementary or middle school children Broke The Routine to serve as good listeners to their "little brother" or "little sister's" problems. Field trips, the ever-popular antidote to the classroom blahs, were in abundance. Geology classes, foreign language classes, theater arts classes, government classes, and journalism classes all took field trips last year. They provided a chance for students to learn something in a fun environment, ending the preconceived notion that learning is boring.

Everyday, from the end of August to the beginning of June we all had the same bleak existence to look forward to. We got up too early for our taste five days a week only to face another monotonous day of school. It seemed inevitable, school would always be hovering over us as a giant gap of eight hours of boredom. But we all did what we could to get by; some slept during class, some doodled, while others spent the time daydreaming.

Junior Lindsay Nadin said, "If I actually knew what the teachers were talking about maybe I'd participate and it wouldn't be so boring." Others didn't quite agree and enjoyed class participation.

"I like it when teachers let you work with partners because then you understand.

dents found lectures dull, and tried to vary activities to make class more interesting. History teacher Mr. Cavanaugh said, "We try to get students involved. It's best when we can throw out a devil's advocate and listen to students debate. When kids get involved they feel like they have an interest, and it's always best to have kids get into it."

Senior Grant Adams agreed, "The classes I have really enjoyed are the ones where the teachers do interesting demonstrations, like physics and creative writing, or the classes where we play games such as C.H.A.P. and government."

So what was the best way to get through class? English teacher Mr. Sweeney said, "Excitement and lack of boredom is a two way street. Teachers can only do so much." Inevitably it was up to the students to work hard.

Books aren't always the way to learn

Little children sit at a table making painted Easter eggs, some play house, while others are playing with blocks in the corner. Is this what you think of when the word high school is brought up? Probably not. When asked how they picture school, most people picture students sitting in class listening to lectures as they try not to nod off during class. A day care probably doesn't come to mind. But, this is exactly what school was for students who took part in the vocational day care class offered at Plainfield High School. But, can taking care of other people's kids really prepare you for your future?

"Yes," said Senior Melissa Morgan. "I want to go into nursing with kids and this gives me some experience working with them. It's hands on, so you learn DECA which was part of the marketing program. Students who were part of the DECA program ran the school bookstore, took part in state competitions, and seniors left school early to work.

"DECA is a lot of fun," said senior Melissa Brown, "It shoots us in a specific area of interest and helps us decide if business is something we want in our future."

If your points of interest were in the automotive, mechanical, or electrical fields then Plainfield had the right classes for you, too. Many students enrolled in the different vocational classes Plainfield offered, while others went to Ben Davis for hands-on classes.

Junior Jason Peel said, "The electronics class involves lots of labs where we build circuits. We can bring in any kind of electronic equipment and repair it."

Over all, Plainfield did a good job preparing students for their futures, whether it was through the vocational classes offered or other hands on experiences in classes such as biology or home ec. By Jennifer Musick

Astudent's worst nightmare: the teacher walked up, handed back your English test, and said, "I thought you could do better." When you looked down, you saw that your paper looked like a reenactment of the Civil War, with all the red marks, and for a second, you wished you lived back then so you wouldn't have to write anymore impossible English papers. To make matters worse, the girl next to you, who was one of the top students in the class, was loudly telling her friends that the test was so easy a baby could have aced it. Then, as if you hadn't suffered enough, some evil power forced your paper to slip out of your hand and to fall to the floor, where everyone saw what a horrible grade you got.

After one of these experiences, most students wondered what they could do to be one of the people that always seemed to be at the top of the class. "It takes determination, hard work, and never giving up, no matter how hard it gets," said junior Sarah Beth

Hadley. Students Climb Some people didn't aim for the top because there's so much work, too much pressure, and they didn't have enough willpower to force themselves to work. Sophomore Jessica French said, "To be on top you have to have self discipline; you have to put pressure on yourself if you want to succeed in the future."

The amount of work required to be on top was different for everyone. For some students, getting good grades came naturally. All they had to do was show up for class, and the knowledge seemed to be absorbed without any work, while other students had to work for their grades. Still, everyone wanted success.

Achievement was great, but there was always a chance of failure. However, preparation, dedication and just plain hard work gave a better chance of making it to the top.

eamwork for the mind

For some, learning is just something to do at school because they have to. But for others it's a competition to see who can gain the most knowledge and who has the spirit to win.

You may ask, "Who goes around learning just so they can know the most?" Well, the answer to that question is the participants of Plainfield's Academic Superbowl teams.

Much time and effort was involved in preparing the Quakers for a victory at challenging competitions. Most teams started practicing in December, and met about once a week preparing for competitions that began March 9th at Danville High School.

This year's topic, "The Environment," applied to every superbowl team. For some subjects, members were required to do research on their own first, then when a meeting was held, everyone shared his/her information with each other to acquire as much knowledge as possible.

Not only were Academic Superbowl teams fun and chal-

"Some material that we covered for Social Studies Academic Superbowl we later studied in class," said Becky Lerch about some other benefits of being on superbowl teams.

lenging, they could also help students with classes at school. Sophomore, Becky Lerch said, "Some material that we covered for Social Studies Academic Superbowl, we later studied in social studies class." Having prior knowledge of a subject made class coverage of the topic easier for students.

Benefits of being a member of the Academic Superbowl teams went beyond learning in class. Knowledge obtained by students was expanded, and students took responsibility to learn new material. "With Academic Superbowl you go much deeper into a subject. and learn more about the environment. Also, it's not a teacher telling you what to learn. You learn on your own free will," said Lerch.

There's more to competition than just athletic events at Plainfield. Academic Superbowl took just as much hard work, determination, and teamwork as any sport. Members put the pressure on themselves to learn and then they pulled together. By Jennifer Musick and Mary Ann Woodward

ded-i-kā-shən: devotion;to sacrifice a part of life to achieve a master goal

Coming to school in the dark was bad enough, but leaving school when it was dark was even worse. However, many students did this for several months year after year. Whether it was early practice at 5:30 in the morning, or lifting after school in the preseason, every athlete put in many hours of hard work. Dedication was what all sports were about. The games during the season were where all the preparation and work showed. All the hours of conditioning, lifting, and off-season training paid off during those few hours of competition. A few fleeting moments of success made all the hours of hard work meaningful.

-being intense and focused the task at hand helped the team win football games

The 1994 year was one of extremes. From a 7-71 defeat by Brownsburg to a 28-0 win against Danville the Quakers experienced many ups and downs during the season. After the first game of the season things turned around for the Quakers. "We worked too hard to loss that badly," said Grant Veith after a defeat to Brownsburg.

After the first game the team went searching for respect.

The next three weeks were all victories, beginning with the Danville game which put the Quakers at 1-1.

The Quakers won the next two games, beating Whiteland by 33 points and a 33-20 win over Mooresville.

"Everything went right on offense and defense, it just clicked," said Tripp Etherington about the Mooresville game. The streak came to an end at Franklin.

"We came in overconfident and they made a few changes we weren't prepared for," said junior Matt Nelson. After that disappointing loss the quakers knew there were some changes that needed to be made. The next week the Quakers turned it around with a big 35-8 win over a talented Breech Grove team.

The next two games with Greenwood and Avon ended with the same result, a loss.

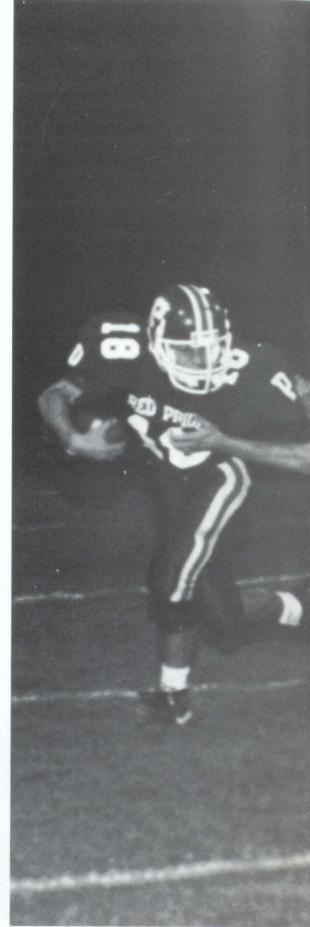

"We thought we could hold up against the rest of the teams, but we knew we had a challenge in the sectional," said Etherington about the Quaker's draw in the sectional.

ENTHUSIASM

-with enthusiasm, the Quakers made it through a disappointing season

"Try not to let your emotions get in the way and just play the game," sophomore Bryce Carter said about the reserve football season.

With the team's overall record of 0-6, the players still kept their morale and attitude up. After some key players from last year's team moved to play varsity, the team was left with some depth problems.

The JV team didn't have enough players to have one offensive team and one defensive team.

"I think we were undermanned. A lot of us played both ways," said sophomore Ryan Grigsby.

This meant that while other teams were running in fresh players, the Quakers had to dig deep inside and play without a rest.

The freshman football team had an average year, with a season record of 2-4-1.

The team started off the year with a 27-27 tie to a strong Danville team. The next game against Beech Grove ended with a disappointing one point loss. The next two games got the team on a winning streak. With a 6 point win over Mooresville and a 21-8 victory over Franklin, the Quakers had two wins under their belts going into the second game they had played with Beech Grove.

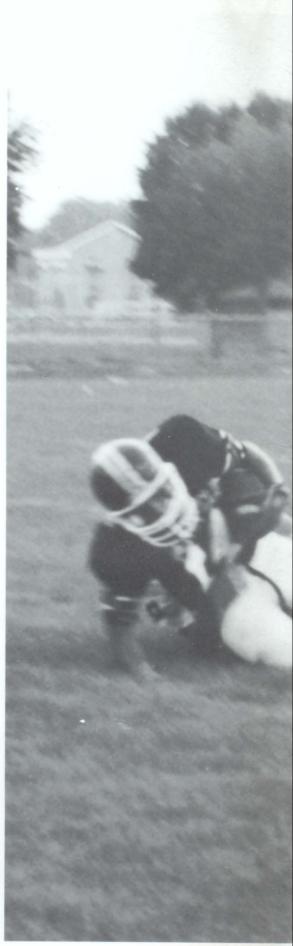

"Everything we did, we did right. We executed everything right," said freshman Scott Himes.

At this point in the season the Quakers' record stood at 2-1-1. The next three games ended up losses, to Beech Grove, Greenwood, and Avon. Though the season ending games were disappointing, the Quakers ended up with an overall record of 2-4-1. By Scott Weaver

-despite having a young squad the girls' swim team achieved success through concentration

"With all the talent we have, with some hard work we should be the team to beat next year," said junior Holly Robertson.

Hopes are high after the highly successful 94-95 season led by 9 freshmen.

With a record of 8-7 the girls' swim team had a winning season despite a varsity lineup comprised mostly of underclassmen. This F r e s h m e n c l a s s brought a strong work ethic and helped begin to turn things around for the Quakers.

"The team came in with a lot more focus than the past few years," said junior Megan Kortepeter.

The girls knew going into the season it would take a great deal of concentration and greater intensity in practice to achieve what they wanted.

The team had very strong showings in big meets. County and Conference were very successful for the girls, but were really the first big meets for the underclassmen. This made it difficult for the team, but the experience gained would prove to be valuable in the future.

The season ended with a very strong showing at Sectionals. In diving, an event which has traditionally been a strong event for the girls, sophomore Robyn Heald qualified for the state championships. The girls also put three people in sectional finals in the 100 Butterfly, which has been a weaker event for them in past seasons. The success continues as these 3 qualifiers return next season.

The girls lost two strong seniors, whose experience will be missed, but next year's senior class will be returning with the knowledge of what hard work can bring, and the underclassmen will be returning with the experience they gained.

DETE MINATION

-determination made this year's soccer team one of the best Plainfield has ever seen

With eight seniors returning, the Quaker boys' soccer team was one of the best that Plainfield had ever seen. Although the season started out slowly with a tied game against Ben Davis, the games that followed proved that Plainfield was a highly talented team.

Even though there were two disappointing ties against County rivals, Brownsburg and Avon, Plainfield dominated such teams as Beech Grove and Franklin, winning by as many as twenty-one goals.

MVP Carl Rohrer said,"My most memorable moment was probably scoring a goal with fifteen seconds left on the clock tying the g a m e a g a i n s t Brownsburg."

When speaking of their season, senior Drew Steele said, "Our season was a disappointment despite our first winning season ever. We didn't meet many of our goals. We should have won about four or five more games, but our overconfidence caused us to lose."

Plainfield went into the County Tournament with high hopes and was determined to beat Avon, the defending champions. With Plainfield going in as the underdog, a hard fought game was played, which ended in a shoot out. Though they were not successful in bringing home a victory, the Quaker soccer team walked off the field with their heads held high knowing that they played to the best of their ability.

As for the reserve teams' season, Coach Donovan said, "We dominated the rest of the teams scoring 59 goals and only giving up 7." Looking forward to coaching the varsity team next year, Mr. Donovan was proud of the reserve team's accomplishments this season.

OPPOR UNITY

-Opportunity knocks for the girls' soccer team this year

"We were all excited about finally having a girls' soccer team here at Plainfield," said sophomore player Erin Smith.

After years of pressure from the students and the community Plainfield decided to establish a girls' soccer team.

The season started off with enthusiasm and high hopes. The first game ended in a letdown for the girls' with Plainfield 1 and Lawrence Central 11. Even though they were defeated, their morale remained high because of the well achieved teamwork.

As the season progressed the girls built up their confidence and beat West Vigo at their home opener with a score of 3-0.

Despite the girls having a losing season, there was a lot to be learned. The season set a foundation for the reputation of the girl's soccer program for years to come.

Though there was room for improvement, Coach Mitzie Owens felt the girls had improved tremendously and had played to the best of their ability.

The tremendous support from the boys' soccer team and the administration gave the girls that extra determination to work together as a team and win. Since this was the girls' first year there were problems to get through.

"The problem with us being a first year team was that we didn't really fit in with the local schedule. Sometimes we had to travel for an hour or so just to get there," said sophomore player Holly Still.

The season finally ended with a 3-9 record. Despite their losses, the girls had fun and fared pretty well against the competition for their first year.

-striving for the top, the boys' tennis team achieved a record season by focusing

The Plainfield boys' tennis team certainly proved their talent this year, finishing off a great season with 11 wins and a mere 3 losses.

"Even though we didn't win the tournaments we wanted to, we still had a really successful season," said junior Billy Humphrey.

Not wasting any time on the road to success, the team started off their regular season matches with dominating scores against such opponents as Beech Grove, Franklin, Ben Davis, and Decatur Central.

The team's attitude played a big role to their success. With four varsity seniors to lead the way, the team was well equipped with not only talent, but the leadership they needed to accomplish their goals.

Mid-state was a competitive tournament, but as always the team held their own. Finishing with a second place the team still went home with their heads held high.

"Our mid-state was tough, we barely lost to Greenwood," said senior Andy Danforth.

By the end of the season, the team had already amazed its fans with an outstanding year, but went on to place another second in the sectional tournament. Senior Craig Clark won sectionals in the number one singles spot and went on to regionals where he was defeated in the second round against Owen Valley's first state ranked player.

"It was a great feeling knowing I was the first one to ever advance this far from our school," said senior Craig Clark.

UNDE TAKING

-the Lady Quakers buried their opponents

in this year's season

Although the Plainfield Lady Quakers may have started this year off on a bad note with a loss to Monrovia, the girls proved to be a very worthy and talented team in the end.

The team had a great season, finishing with a record of 16 wins and 5 losses. "It was a pretty good season, I just wish we would have won more games," said senior Beth Kalb.

Even with frustrating losses to teams such as Monrovia, Whiteland, and rival Martinsville, the team still kept their spirits high. The girls never dwelled on a win or loss from a previous night's game, but at each new practice they set goals for their next obstacle.

Hard work in practices got the girls physically prepared for the games, but becoming mentally prepared was an even tougher job.

"We worked well together, except when we got behind," said Kalb.

County at Cascade was a disappointing tournament for the girls, but they didn't let the loss stop them.

They picked things up the next game and crushed Tri-West, proving that nothing would keep them down. When the girls' spirits got down, support from the fans kept them going. At every game Plainfield's cheering section was not only seen, but heard as well.

"I thought it was really cool the way they came to our games and got into it so much," said junior Theresa Nyeswander. "When we were playing teams like Martinsville, it shook them up".

ENDUR NCE

-through seasons of adversity the cross-country team has endured to show improvement in seasons to come

Strength, endurance, training, commitment. This was the cross country team; could you go the distance?

The season began with a three day camping trip at McCormick's Creek, where they explored caves, hiked, swam, and most of all ran. For most of the team, this was the best part of the season, and also the hardest.

"I made a lot of friends and learned a lot of things from different people, but I had to push myself to keep up with the others," said freshman Shawn Sidener.

Practices continued throughout the season, which included sprints, stretches, and running five to seven miles everyday after school and on Saturdays.

"Even though cross country isn't the most popular sport, I admire anyone who can run that far without ending up in the hospital," said sophomore Amanda Osborne.

The team members also showed their admiration for each other when they cast their votes for MVP and Mental Attitude Award winners. The MVP winners were Karol Reed and Brad Lyons, and the Mental Attitude Awards were given to Lauren Baker and Mike Reed. This year the cross country team completed their first winning season in four years with a girls' score of 8-5, and the boys' final record, 7-6.

"Most people don't see the point of running two to three miles for each competition, but seeing the ribbon at the end of the race, beating your best time, or just knowing that you finished made it worth everything," said Sidener.

Junior Karen Reed said, "We all came together as a team and just had fun, which is hard for athletes who compete on their own and sometimes against each other." By Renee Clore

-from getting the ball to taking a fall, it's all fun and games

Bumps, bruises, and time are what many Plainfield girls sacrificed for the school's annual powderpuff game.

Because the game was open to everyone, for once girls could play on a team without the fear of being cut or excluded.

"Not having cuts made everyone look like they were equal," said sophomore Annie Steele.

As practices dragged on, game night finally came.

When the night began, excitement and energy were present on the sidelines as well as the field. The outcome of the first game, freshmen against sophomores saw the first year players, the freshmen, victorious. As the field was cleared by the girls, another important part of the evening was ready to begin.

In fact, the halftime alone could easily have been the night's highlight. As is customary in Plainfield, after the first game, the king and prince from each class are chosen.

"My favorite part of the night was at halftime when the seniors covered each other with shaving cream, mustard, and eggs," said senior Andrea Herrin. After all eggs were smashed and the shaving cream had run out, the final game resumed.

The remainder of the evening was a battle between the class of 95 and 96. The seniors tried their best to take home a final win, but the game ended with a win by the junior class.

When it was all over it was difficult to distinguish the winners from the losers. There were no hard feelings or disappointment felt as the girls walked off the field. In the end all that was left was a wonderful memory of a fabulous night. By Anne Gath

DOMIN TION

Domination is the only word that can be used to describe the 1994-1995 boys swimming season. With a dual meet record of 14-1 and an average margin of victory of 87 points, dominate is exactly what the Quakers did. Along with win after win came seven school records, one conference record, and two county records.

The team knew that the talent was there, but the wins and the championship trophies wouldn't be handed to them. DARING

-the girls' gymnastics team risked injury and pushed the limits of fear, day after day

People often view gymnastics as an individual sport. This is true in that a gymnast competes alone on an event, but a unified team requires teamwork. This year's team used teamwork to pull them through the best and worst of times. Team unity brought fun memories, like overnight trips to invitationals that gave the girls a chance to become better friends.

Senior Vicky Smith said, "There was no big separation between classes. We all had fun together throughout the whole year."

Teamwork wasn't only fun and games, it also built potential.

Assistant Coach Diana Lautenschlager said, "We didn't have a winning season, but we accomplished a lot by coming together as a team to build potential for next year."

With a record of 5-7, the team succeeded with personal improvements throughout the season due to much hard work and self-discipline. Freshman Erin Brown said, "How hard the practices are depends on how bad you want to do the work to improve."

The girls enjoyed having fun, but also had their share of injuries and illnesses. With as many as seven girls out of competition at one point, Coach Bev Rink said, "We lost some girls who could have been very beneficial, but at the same time we gave the freshmen a lot more good experience than normal."

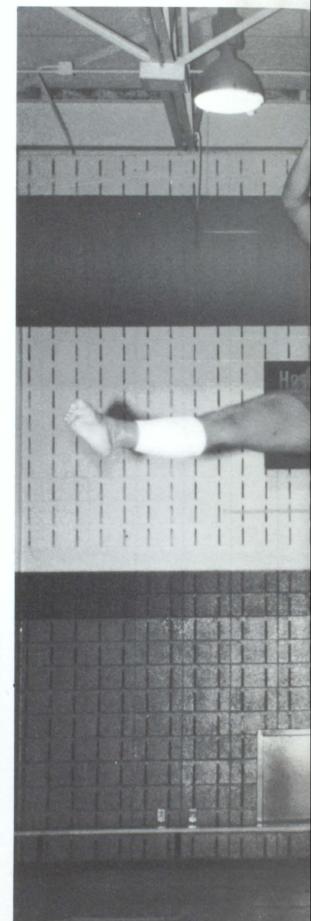

Behind this team that valued good teamwork was Coach Bev Rink, who promoted it. With the announcement of her retirement, many tears were shed. Future coach Lautenschlager explains, "She wasn't there just to win. She promoted good discipline, teamwork, and just wanted everyone to have a good time."

INTIMIDATION

-the wrestling team goes undefeated, dominating their opponents

The Quakers accomplished more than any other Plainfield wrestling team taking the Super 6, County, Mid-State, Sectional, and Regional titles along with an undefeated season.

The wrestlers had a perfect record of 21-0 during the season dominating most teams winning by as much as 78 to 0.

The closest matches of the season were against Beech Grove and Ben Davis but Plainfield still escaped with two victories.

At the County tournament senior Shane Brown accomplished something that has only happened once in the County's history. He won the title for his fourth consecutive year.

"When I won County it was the most exciting experience I've ever accomplished in my wrestling career." said Brown.

Sophomore Brian Smiley finished his season with a record of 21-0, the only wrestler of 94-95 team to have an undefeated season.

"Even though I didn't win State, I accomplished everything I wanted to during the season." said Smiley.

Even though the team didn't win the Semi-State championship, they placed 7th out of 54 teams advancing three wrestlers to the State tournament.

During his junior year, Ryan Cobb placed fourth and was the only wrestler from Plainfield to go to State. His senior year he returned to State along with senior Corey Haggard and Sophomore Brian Smiley. Cobb finished third at 172 pounds and Smiley finished seventh at 103 pounds.

VICTORY

-with only 2 losses the season was filled with victory

Repeating the year after you win a sectional is hard, but with four returning seniors and four key players coming back, the Lady Quakers seemed up to the challenge. With a starting freshman point quard, the team was well balanced. "I knew Tami was physically capable of playing, the question was, was she mentally capable?" said Head Coach Bob Lynn. That question was soon answered.

The first nine games were all wins. With the 78-41 victory over Pike, and the 70-30 defeat of Cascade, the Quakers showed that they were a strong contender for the sectional crown.

The only loss of the regular season came in the county tournament. Plainfield lost by a score of 40-47 to a Brownsburg team that they had defeated earlier in the season. "We spread the floor like we wanted to but we missed some layups," said Lynn. Big games all ended in victories for the Quakers. Greenwood, Danville, Mooresville, Avon and Whiteland all fell as Plainfield prepared for sectionals.

An exciting win over Avon gave Plainfield the sectional trophy.

In Regionals, Plainfield's first round opponent was Eminence.

"We knew that on the outside they were tough," said Lynn, "but not that tough on the inside."

The Quakers started slow, and the two star guards for Emenence were tough on the outside as Lynn had thought. But the Quakers mounted a comeback that put them in position to tie the game on a tough baseline jumper at the buzzer. As the shot rolled out, and the Quakers finished the strong season with a record of 17-2 and a hard fought sectional title.

ACHIEVEMENT

-the reserve and freshman girls' basketball teams succeeded in achieving all their goals

Achievement was definitely the word to describe the 1994-95 reserve and freshman girls' basketball teams.

"The year was fun. All of us worked together as a team," said reserve player Allison McClure.

The girls were close friends and understood each other when game time came around. This quality came in handy when the girls had tough opponents against them. They communicated well on the floor as well as outside of school, which helped them get enthusiastic about winning.

The Reserve team, coached by Ms. Masariu, ended their season with 13 wins and 3 losses.

Not only could the girls brag about their record, but they could also say what a fun time it was winning.

This year was the first year to establish a freshmen girl's basketball team. Not only was a new team established but a new teacher coached the girls.

" I thought it would be rough early, but as soon as they picked it up, they got better as the season went on," said Coach Benge.

The girls had a tough time ahead of them competing against teams that had played together for longer than a few practices.

"I knew it would be a difficult season because we were starting out as a first year team," said freshman player Tiffani Nichols.

The girls proved to themselves and to other teams that they could pull together as a first year team and have a very skillful season.

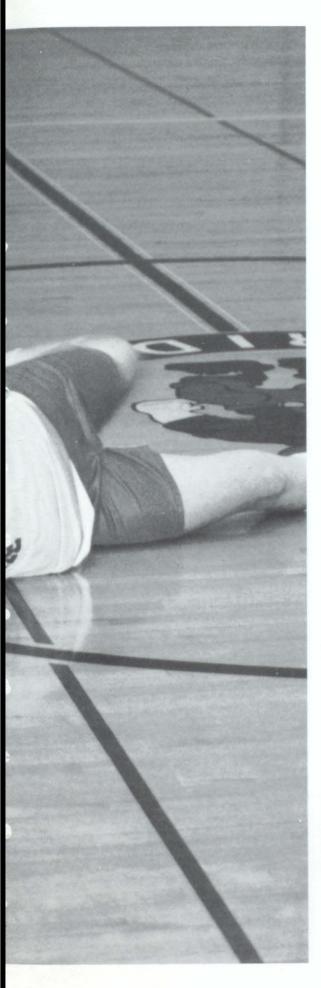

The freshmen completed the season with 10 wins and 4 losses. This record showed the girls, that even as a first year team, they were good enough to hold their own. With the potential shown, next year's team should be outstanding. By Jenny Blake

FEARLESS

-the Quaker's remained undaunted while playing some of the best teams in the state

The Quakers started the 1994-95 season returning three starters, Nick Catlin, Bill Humphrey, and Mike Ellis. The two seniors, Jon Wallace and Brian Ellis, provided some much needed leadership.

Plainfield started the season with a one point loss to Avon. "We were not experienced in a game situation. We were a young team," said David Ratcliff.

Plainfield picked up two wins over Whiteland and Monrovia. A two point loss at Lebanon fired the Quakers up for the Beech Grove game.

Plainfield went into the game against Beech Grove with an even higher level of intensity than before. It showed in the final score, 96-77.

The next game at Zionsville put the Quakers' endurance to the test. An up and down game plus two over times left Plainfield exhausted, but with an exciting win. A three-pointer in the corner by Mike Ellis at the buzzer gave the Quakers a one point win.

With a win at Speedway, the Quakers' record stood at 11-6. The next two games put the Quakers to the test. With yet two more disappointing losses, Plainfield fell to Franklin and Ben Davis.

The Quakers picked up one more win at Western Boone before h e a d i n g i n t o sectionals.

The Quakers' first game was against Avon, who had defeated them by one point their first game. In a come from behind win Plainfield stole a victory. This left the Quakers looking towards playing a tough Brownsburg team.

Though Plainfield played a hard fought game, the Bulldogs came out on top. With this season ending disappointment, the Quakers' final record stood at 13-9. By Scott Weaver

-winning games now, the freshmen and JV are the future of Plainfield basketball

Two points was all that separated Plainfield and Avon in the first game of the season. A fourth quarter comeback had given the Quakers a two point victory.

Plainfield won games by an average of 18 points. These wins over Greencastle, Danville, and Tri-West gave the Quakers some much needed confidence entering the Brownsburg tourney.

The Quakers finally started playing as a team. "We hit the boards hard. Our backcourt picked up the scoring while the frontcourt did the dirty work." said Jere m y Fite a bout Plainfield's win over Ben at Davis. The tourney d ended when the Quakof ers lost the last game.

Losses to Whiteland and Lebanon, and a win over Monrovia left the record at 7-5. The next two games were victories against Beech Grove and Zionsville. The Quakers followed that with a one point win over Greenwood and a four point win over Speedway. The Quakers fell to both Ben Davis and Franklin the next two games. They ended their season with a victory at Western Boone.

The freshman team started the season with three wins. Avon, Whiteland all fell to the Quakers. Their first I o s s c a m e t o Mooresville.

"We were down one point and went for a steal," said Ben Egenolf, "and they hit a layup and a freethrow. We brought the ball up the floor and hit a three pointer. They got the ball in and just wasted time."

The Quakers put themselves back together at the end of the season and suceeded in getting four wins in a row. A loss to Brownsburg ended the season putting the Quakers' record at 11-10.

CONFIDENCE

- a combination of skill and confidence led the Quaker golf team to a victorious season

The boys' golf team had an outstanding season only losing 3 meets and winning the County and Mid-State tournaments. Returning to the team were many players from the year before, who were ready to have a great season.

Even though golf is thought to be an individual sport, team spirit is just as essential as in any other sport. Add in dedication and confidence, and that was the recipe that carried this year's team to victory.

The team dominated their schedule sometimes winning by as many as 25 strokes against talented teams.

The season got underway when the Quakers defeated Danville and then followed the win with another against Decatur Central.

The team came up big in a dual meet with Avon and Monrovia; the Quakers beating them both. They had a score of 154 strokes to Avon's 171 strokes and Monrovia's 195 strokes.

Plainfield had their first lost in a tough dual meet against Greencastle and Cloverdale, with Greencastle winning by 3 strokes.

"Even though we had a good season, I think we could have won some of the meets we lost. Every meet that we lost was by a few strokes," said senior Darrick Hutchens.

The Quakers played well in the Mid-State tournament and earned first place. The other two losses came later in the season to very talented Martinsville by 2 strokes and Center Grove by 9 strokes.

In the Franklin Central meet the team faced strong competition and finished 6th.

To end the season, Plainfield met with rival Brownsburg in one of the biggest matches of the season, winning by 4 strokes. At the sectional meet, they were victorious moving onto regionals and then state.

SMASHING

-despite new faces the girls' tennis team turned their matches into a smashing season

While the girls' tennis team prepared for their season, they imagined what it would be like to play with new faces.

Coach Cathy Schaible started the girls into the right attitude by teaching them to not give up and to complete their matches with feelings of victory.

Since the team consisted of many new underclassmen, the girls had to learn to be tough competitors and work as a team.

"At first I thought the season would be tough because of the new players, but it was a good turn out for the team," said Dionne Hagen. In no time the girls played as a team and competed with great skill. They found their weaknesses early in the season and overcame them with their strengths.

The doubles players had a strong contribution to the team by playing tough and not giving up. "I enjoyed finishing the matches with feelings of victory," said Kari Ackerson.

The singles players gave the team its victories also by winning many matches. "Playing singles was great. I enjoyed hanging out before the matches with my friends and contributing my victories to the team," said number three singles player, Kalleen Steele.

Senior Becky Smith played an excellent season. She was a tough competitor who played number two singles. "I think about the game and don't get down on myself. I try to concentrate on my movements and don't let anything get in my way," said number two singles player Becky Smith.

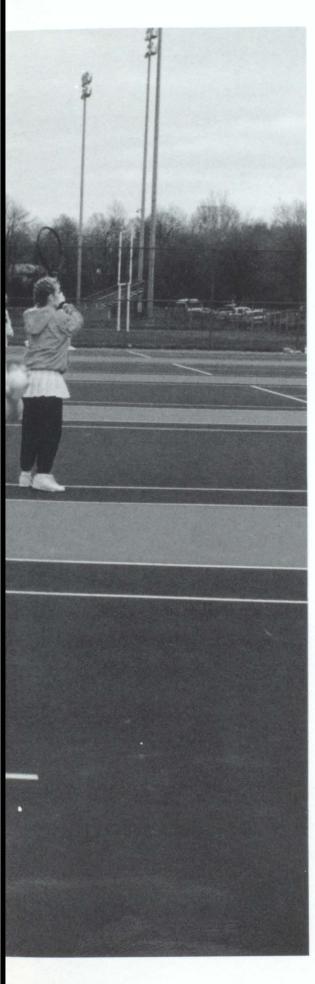

The girls ended their season with 8 wins and 3 losses to Ben Davis, Avon, and Brownsburg. They placed 2nd in County and finished with pride.

POTENT

-with all the weapons of a good team the Quakers could go off at any time

Winning the first couple games of the season is important. It sets the tone for the rest of the season and starts the team off on a streak. The Quakers started the season just this way, with wins over both Ben Davis and Danville. Both victories were at home and gave the team the confidence they needed to get through the season.

The next two games, against Cascade and Cloverdale, showed that Plainfield knew how to win in close games. Both games ended in the score of 12-11. The Quakers, now 4-1, were building a good momentum. That momentum came to a halt however starting with a 3-11 loss to Chatard then a 7-11 loss to Zionsville.

To break out of the slump, the Quakers needed to suceed in the Martinsville Tourney. The victory Plainfield was looking for did not come in the first game. The Quakers suffered a close 3-6 loss at the hands of Lawrence North. With three losses in a row the team was now hungrier than ever.

The Quakers got the much needed win in the second game of the tourney. A 5-1 win over North Putnam put Plainfield at 5-4. A loss at Franklin evened up Plainfield's record at 5-5.

The Quakers fought back with a five run win over South Putnam, as the boys dedicated themselves to the fight. The next game was at home against Greenwood. The team came away win a hard fought 10-1 win. The next game with Whiteland proved to be a tough game for both teams, but the Quakers came out on top 2-1.

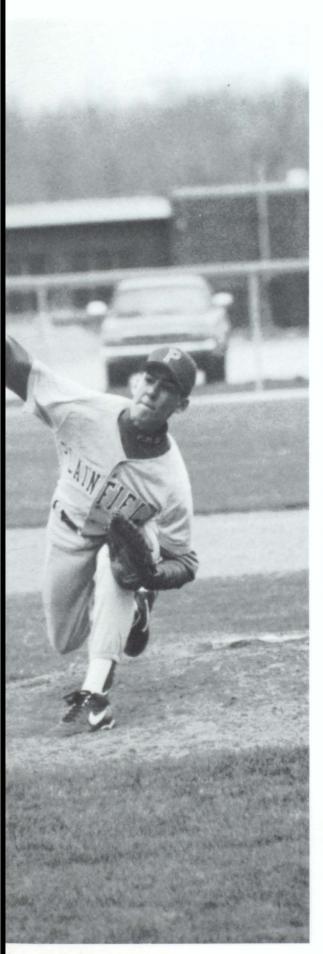

The boys came out with a record of 9-8 and a sectional victory. Regionals were hard fought, with a loss in the final game. By Scott Weaver

- the reserve and freshman teams attack both games and practices with aggression

The season started off the wrong way for the reserve team, with a 7 to 11 loss to Ben Davis at home.

The Quakers got back on track with a win over Cascade. The next two games, a doubleheader with Warren Central, presented the opportunity to pull Plainfield's record up to 3-1. The Quakers gave a good effort, but came up short in both games.

The next two games evened Plainfield's record to 3-3. Victories over Martinsville and Whiteland were big wins, giving the Quakers confidence. Plainfield's next game was at home, a g a i n s t r i v a l Brownsburg.

An away game at Greenwood dropped the Quakers' record to 4-5. Plainfield quickly came back with a 12-6 victory over Tri-West. In the Plainfield tourney, the Quakers lost to Brownsburg in the first game and also struggled in the second game.

A doubleheader with Bloomington North ended Plainfield's season with a 9-8 record.

The freshman team started with a 5-7 loss to Perry Meridian. The second loss of the season came at the hands of Brownsburg. With two straight losses, Plainfield needed a win badly.

Their first victory came at home to Mooresville by a score of 10-5.

The next game was at Whiteland ending in a 1-7 loss, putting the freshman record at 1-3. The Quakers went into the next four games with something to prove.

A 14-4 win over South Wayne, a 13-0 victory at Lebanon, a 7-3 win at Franklin, and a 10-8 win against Fulton proved that the Quakers were back in action.

With a record of 5-3, Plainfield made a very strong comeback to achieve a winning season record. By Scott Weaver

-the varsity and reserve softball teams kept an intense tone throughout the year

For the entire season, the girls' varsity and reserve softball teams kept a main line, positive, approach at hand.

The reserve team achieved a great season suffering only one loss to Center Grove. They found success by having the right attitudes, sticking together, and being there for one another when troubles occurred on the field. "Whenever a mistake was made, there was always someone there to help," said Lindsay McClure.

As a new addition to the coaching staff, Kurt Benge took on the challenge of the reserve team. Coach Benge gave the reserve girls the skills and motivation they needed to start the season with pride and end it with dignity.

The varsity team, coached by Mr. Clapp, continued the tradition of being victorious. With a winning season and a Sectional Championship title, the Lady Quakers had a successful season.

Though a few of the girls were underclassmen, age didn't present a problem with the older members. Instead, varsity veterans showed them the ropes and encouraged commitment.

Freshman Tami

Masterson, contributed a great deal for her first varsity season.

"At first I felt that I would not be able to keep up with the other girls due to my inexperience. Soon I realized that if I gave it my best, I could compete just like any other varsity player."

Both teams had a total of 7 rain outs. However, these dreary rain outs did not cause the teams to be intimidated by lack of play. They continued to practice diligently and went on to future wins.

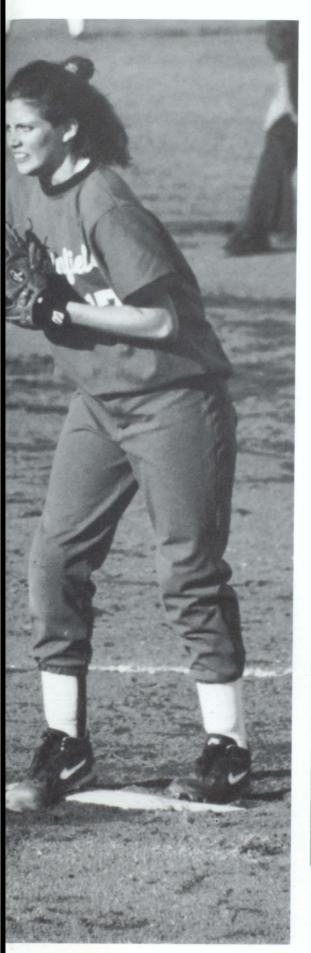

Both the reserve and varsity teams' dedication paid off. By Jenny Blake with talent and desire the boys' track team came out with a near perfect dual season and a great finish

The boys' track team started the season with very high expectations. Except for a couple minor set backs which kept their desire high, all expectations were met. The track team had a dual meet record of 11-1, losing only to a very strong Terre-Haute North team. Along with a great dual meet record the team won sectionals and had a very strong showing at regionals placing fourth.

The team was led by very strong junior and senior classes. "We knew going into the season that we had a lot of talent and would be very tough," said junior Charlie Knuth. The guys knew that Avon would be their toughest competition in the area and when the three way meet with Avon and Greenwood came, Plainfield was ready defeating both teams.

The boys' track team had probably its worst performance of the season placing third in the County meet; they felt they could have won. This served as motivation for the team for the rest of the season. A few days later the two teams met again at County. Plainfield performed much closer to its potential, but things still weren't going Plainfield's way. The 4x100 relay team, which won and scored enough points for the Quakers to win, was disqualified and caused the Quakers to lose to Avon by 1 point. This was all the motivation the boys' track team needed. The boys went into sectionals knowing they were the best team there and refused to let mistakes take that away from them. The Quakers qualified someone for regionals in every running event but one. At regionals the 4x100 relay team and Nathaniel Brandt in the high hurdles qualified for state. By Brandon Judkins new talent and new coaches made this year's season unpredictable

Beginning this year's season, the girls' track team had some questions as to how their performance would be. Not only were there new runners trying their hand at the sport, but the team also gained Mr. Ken Schnepp as their new coach.

Starting the season, the girls accomplished an impressive victory against Cascade. "It was really exciting for me to see our pre-season work pay off," said Coach Schnepp.

Although the season was not a winning one, it did end with a record of 4-1-5.

For the biggest and most exciting accomplishments the team placed in big meets. They placed 4th at Speedway during the Mid-State tournament. Sophomore Amanda Laubacher placed first in the shot-put, while the rest of the team placed well in their events.

The team finished the County tournament with a 5th place showing. The team later went on to upset County Champion Brownsburg by tying them at the last regular season meet. "I think one of the biggest surprises was beating them in the 4x4 and the 4x1 because they were County Champs," said Coach Schnepp.

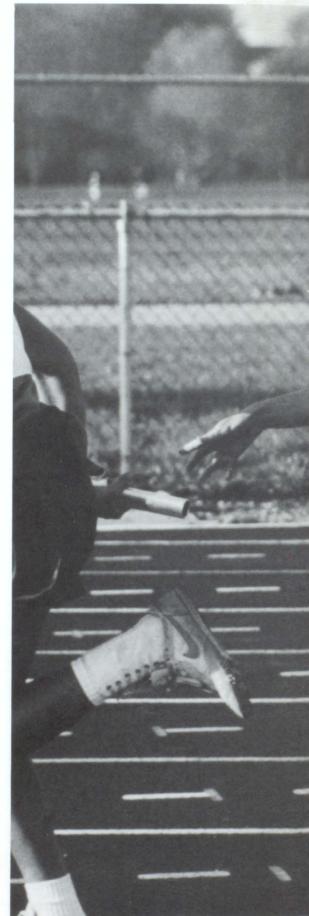

The sectional tournament was a highlight for the girls' season. Although they only placed fourth, the team did well enough to advance eight girls to regionals. "I was really excited to see so many girls advance," said sophomore Allie Moore, "I was surprised that our 4x1 team came in second because even though we were seeded first we had an injured runner."

Although the team did not advance past regional, the season proved to be very successful, leaving a tough precedent for next year's team to follow. By Anne Gath

kə-lab-ə-ra-shə n: workíng wíth others to achíeve a common goal

As the final bell rang to end the school day, some students rushed out to fight traffic while others chose to stay after and participate in club activities. Those who weren't involved often thought that joining a club meant attending boring meetings or doing extra school work by choice. Anyone who participated could tell you differently. Clubs required collaboration. Plainfield clubs worked hard to make a difference. Although each person had different reasons for joining, clubs gave everyone the opportunity to make new friends while doing something they enjoyed.

Find Opportunities

New clubs seemed to be what was hot at Plainfield in the 1994-95 school year. We had two new additions to our clubs section. The Environmental Club, which originally started out the year before, really developed into something worthwhile for our school. At the start of the school year members of the club constructed boxes to put old or used paper in to be recycled. It seemed to be a hit for students as well as teachers. Not only was recycling big,T-shirt sales seemed to interest everyone as well.

Throughout the school year the Environmental Club accomplished many things. Some of which include selling Humanity T-shirts, recycling paper, and participating in a bake sale to raise money for the club. "I think we have really accomplished a lot in the short time we have been together because we are all dedicated to helping our high school," said sophomore Allison Moore, member of the Environmental Club.

Even some other students who weren't directly involved in the club felt that it was an asset to the entire school. "I think the club is a great addition to our school because it promotes environmental awareness," stated junior Dave Sturdevant.

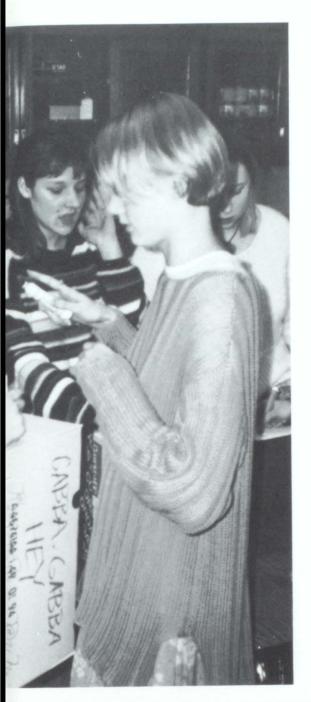

The Environmental Club was not the only new club to have arrived last year. A few junior students got the idea to put together a club for writers, with the help of Mrs. Kellogg and Mrs. Cumberworth. This was put together by students who wanted to be able to write for fun and get suggestions in the process. A few days before they met, they submiyted stories/poems to Mrs. Kellogg. She then made copies for all who wanted to read. During the meetings they critiqued each other's work and gave suggestions. "It's been a good opportunity for students to interact with others," said Mrs. Kellogg, one of the sponsors for the Writers' Block.

The Isn't Always

Out of 1,060 students at Plainfield, a well selected group of students were chosen to be a part of the National Honor Society . What did it take to get into Honor Society?

Students who had a grade point average of 3.5 or better, and participated in various activities shared their special gifts, talents or skills with others. Along with a 3.5 GPA requirement the students were also judged by various teachers on responsibility and leadership qualities. This was a group of many different personalities, who all shared one common goal: academic excellence. They represented Plainfield's academic accomplishments to the fullest.

The National Honor Society consisted of 59 students, 31 of whom were seniors, and 28 were juniors.

"The present group of seniors is the largest group of members that have ever been on the Honor Society", said Mrs. Bowman, sponsor.

"With basketball and tennis, keeping at least a 3.5 grade point average can be a little rough," said junior Billy Humphrey. Most National Honor Society members kept a busy schedule as well as keeping up their grades. Such activities included band, choir, sports, clubs, jobs and community work.

As part of the required community services, some senior members tutored middle school students as well as dressing up on Halloween and visiting the Kindergarten Center.

All members were required to perform at least one community service project as an individual. Some of these included shoveling driveways, grocery shopping for elderly neighbors and volunteering at a hospital.

These students led very full lives but proved they were able to take on many challenges. They took pride in representing Plainfield.

Food Fellowship This Year

"It's called the Fellowship of Christian Athletes but you don't have to be a fellow, you don't necessarily have to be a Christian, and you don't have to be an athlete," said Mrs. Moreland about FCA. "All you really need is to believe in God."

Moreland, along with Mr. Chandler and Mr. Peters, sponsored FCA for the 1994-1995 school year. They planned events and activities aimed at boosting student participation in the group. "At any one meeting we usually have 20 to 30 kids, but each meeting brings different kids. If we made up the entire list, we'd have a lot of members," Moreland said.

Fellowship of Christian Athletes sounds religious, but most of the religion was discussed at the meetings. Adventures were chosen to show the active side of FCA and to interest people who wouldn't normally join. Guest speakers such as Rusty Hawkins helped add to the excitement of the group. Members attended retreats in October and March, and eight Plainfield High School FCA members were sent to Market Square Arena for a leadership conference.

FCA did community projects as well. The club helped Jo Ann Fabrics pack and move out of Plainfield Plaza last January and collected money for the Leukemia Society at a basketball game with Ben Davis.

The Plainfield chapter of FCA joined forces with Avon High School's FCA to throw a tailgate party at the last home Plainfield football game. The club also held a raffle for a football autographed by the Indianapolis Colts and attended an FCA night with the Pacers.

Sponsors and students alike hoped for another big jump in student involvement. Moreland said, "Anyone is welcome to come. We're always glad to have new members."

World Culture

Mrs. Moreland, Mrs. Weaver, and Mr. Schnepp will usually greet their students with "buenos dias" when coming into class.

Students who were taking Spanish and were looking for a little bit of fun and excitement after school signed up for Spanish club for a small fee of two dollars. Last year the Spanish club did a series of activities. Usually these activities related to the Spanish culture in some way. The club would go out for a night of fun at a Mexican restaurant such as La Bombas, or Don Pablos. Anyone who wished to go just needed to be a member of the club.

"I think everyone had a great time ice skating. Mainly because they were all with their friends," said Mrs. Weaver. Ice skating was just one of the fun adventures Spanish club members participated in throughout the year. There was never a better time to laugh a little than when you watched your friends fall on the ice and embarrass themselves. Ice skating seems like a fun thing to do and memorable place to go, maybe it was because no one seemed to be a pro at it or would even let go of the side railing to skate out in the open. What would it be like to see another country? Would they do everything the same as we do? Do they have the same styles and social ways? Well, you could have had the opportunity to have all your questions answered, because at the end of the school year your Spanish teachers gave you the opportunity to visit Spain. You could actually put all the Spanish you learned to use, if money was not an option. Going to another country was expensive but it was an experience students would never forget.

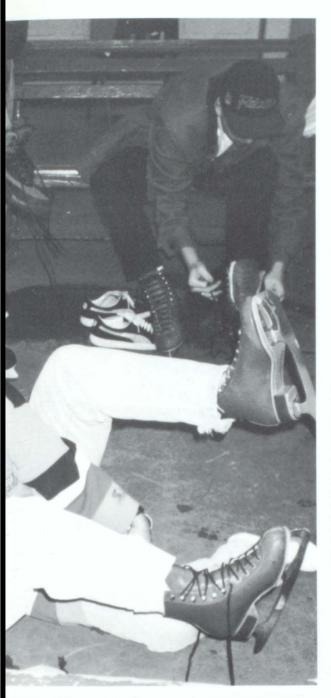

Spanish classes had many new and exciting opportunities to offer. Spanish did not only introduce you to a new language, but you were opened up sto a whole new culture.

Languages Students

Knowing more than one language can be a big advantage in today's world. Many different languages and cultures are growing all around the world and this was why being a part of a foreign language club was a privilege. German teacher Mrs. Ament and French teacher Mrs. McAllister worked together to bring cultural experiences to the French and German clubs.

The German and French clubs were a great experience for all members. These foreign language clubs consisted of about 40-50 students, and a student had only to pay a $2.00 fee. The clubs didn't have weekly meetings or homework assignments. They were just clubs for students who shared a common interest of learning more about different cultures. Students felt the activities were just like having an evening out with friends. These activities included things like skating, bowling, and going out to dinner. The trips abroad happened in the summer time when sponsors took students to foreign countries. Some of the countries visited on the trips were France, Germany, Austria, and Switzerland. Even with the promise of traveling abroad, many students chose not to be in the French and German clubs because they felt it would take up too much time, but that was not the case. Activities were often planned around other events for the students' convenience.

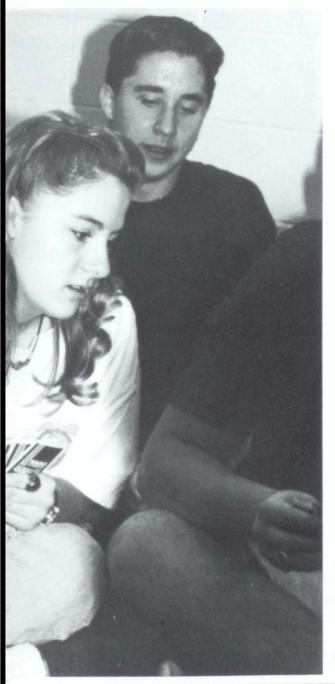

As a goal for French and German clubs of the future, the sponsors wish to see more students get involved, hopefully boosting interest in more cultural activities. "I'd like to see the clubs doing more educational things. When I first started here, I would invite speakers and have slide shows. But with all of the technology out today, the kids aren't as drawn to it as they use to be. It got to the point where I'd invite a speaker and only 5 kids would show up," said Mrs. McAllister, French club sponsor. Despite low participation, French and German clubs were a rewarding experience for all.

et Win Big

"It's been a banner year," said Mr. Sims, director of the Plainfield show choir, Belles et Beaux. The group definitely had a successful season, with best choreography awards at two competitions and best vocals at three. Grand champion of both the DeKalb and Center Grove Invitationals, the 32 member group made its place in Plainfield history as more than just the largest Belles et Beaux ever, but as the first to win grand champion honors.

The hard work that was necessary to have such an outstanding season was rewarded by a four day cruise to Nassau and the Bahamas during spring break. In order to pay for the trip Belles et Beaux sponsored a series of fundraisers, including the sale of pizzas, wreaths, and fruit. There were no awards at stake or titles to be won on the cruise, but they did perform two shows, one on the ship and one on land.

Students got involved in Belles et Beaux for many different reasons, one of which was the friendships within the group.

"One of my favorite parts of being in the group is the friends I've made. The group is really close. Almost everyone is good friends. It's nice to have all those people to be there for you," said junior member Mike Shannon.

"I teach all my students to work well with everyone, but it does help to know and like the people you perform with," said Sims.

The majority of the 14 seniors in the group had been working with Sims since the 8th grade and the experience provided leadership, both musically and personally, to the younger members of the group. The experience of the upperclassmen, combined with the talent of all members, and the hard work of the crew and band, made 1994-95 a memorable Belles et Beaux season.

Determined By_{Size}

The Plainfield bands were relatively small compared to other bands they competed with. They were often referred to as "The little guy, with the big sound," said Mr. Roberts, Plainfield band director. It's hard to even think that a band with about only 70 members could have competed and won against another band twice their size.

The bands competed many times throughout the 94-95 season. They performed in state regionals, in the Christmas and spring concerts, played at Hummel Park, hosted the Plainfield Marching Festival, and the biggest highlight of their season was the trip to Florida at the end of the school year.

The band won the Columbus North competition, was third at a competition in Lebanon, and received a first place division rating at district and regionals. These medals and trophies can be credited to the hard work and determination of all the band members along with the great brass and percussion sections of the band.

Just like other clubs or sports, a band needs leadership from it's seniors and that was just what they received. "I think that we should be led by seniors because they have been in band longer than any other members, and they know more about band than we do," said freshman Tony Stinnett.

As time went by many things changed. It's no different for the Plainfield bands. This season the marching band believed in themselves and their product.

Mr. Roberts was pleased with all his bands this year. He was proud of the level of performance they achieved during their competitions and practices. In all, the Plainfield bands had a good season and look forward to improving next year, and strive to excel in their talent.

Drama Acts

The curtain rises, the lights go on, and the fun begins. In Plainfield's drama department, you not only got to act, you were also involved in behind-thescenes work, such as making props. Cast and crew members spent time together working on stage decorations to enhance the play.

Mrs. Murphy led the department for the first semester, as well as teaching a semester class called Theatre Arts.

"Theatre Arts with Murph was definitely my favorite class ; it gave me more self-confidence as an actor and as an individual. It was also a good opportunity to make new friends," said senior Henning Klatran. At the semester, Mrs. Murphy was replaced by Mrs. Ray. Ray led the theatre department through the spring play, Barefoot in the Park, as well as organizing second semester drama club events.

Another aspect of the drama department was an acting troupe called Think Fast. There were 12 members in Think Fast who performed improvisational skits in the community. They involved audiences by asking them to choose important elements in the skits, such as what each person should pretend to be.

"Think Fast was great; you got to act goofy in front of a lot of people and get rewarded for it," said sophomore member Robby Stafford.

Think Fast was not well known, but a select group of performers called thespians were even less known. To become a thespian at Plainfield you must have accumulated 10 Thespian points, which you could get by performing in plays and musicals. After getting the necessary points, members were inducted into the International Thespian Society.

Everyone involved in drama, from crew member to star performer, added something valuable to the department.

The 👘 stuff

-RSVP

And Work Come Together

Welcome to the Plainfield journalism department where you must be able to work well in groups and handle responsibility to survive. Last year's journalism classes did more than read newspapers and write stories. First year students studied the basics of writing, history, and design then used that information on a larger task: the yearbook. For the second year in a row every decision was made by students in the class. The choices and deadlines proved to be more than some students bargained for.

"When I signed up for the class, I didn't even know we'd do the yearbook. I thought we'd learn to be better writers," said Kate Skirvin.

Dealing with the pressure proved to be rewarding for some. Hard work not only gave a class of over 30 people the chance to get involved in the school, it prepared them for tasks they'll face if they go on to the second year class.

Students in their second or third year in journalism were responsible for producing the school newspaper. This group of 15 upperclassmen was chosen by Mrs. Brown-Frank, the advisor, based on the work they'd done in years past. The new staff made some changes in the paper, such as devising a new layout design and adding a spotlight section to highlight students whose talents weren't school related. An Arts and Entertainment page was added to showcase the works of students who weren't on staff. With these changes and 13 new staff members, the RSVP got a new feel.

"It was fun to be involved in something where you have to adapt to different personalities but still meet deadlines," said Amanda Lavery.

Working together made it possible for the RSVP staff to produce a newspaper, just as cooperation in the first year class made a yearbook possible. Both publications required more than being able to read magazines. They required the desire to produce something valuable for Plainfield students and faculty.

From using maps to find our classes to taking those refreshing college days, everyone went through many changes in high school. We found our individuality, slowly, as time passed. As freshmen, the main concern was getting adjusted to high school life. Sophomores worried about their driving privileges and money resources. As juniors, nightmares of ACT's and SAT's destroyed a good nights sleep. Finally, nail-biting seniors waited impatiently for their letters of acceptance into the school of their choice. Although each class was different from every other, students were all headed in the same direction.

The future awaited, and so did class rings, year long gym classes where you swam in the middle of winter, and of course, who could leave out the ever so short five minute passing period? Those were all elements that made you what you were, a freshman. Since the time you hit the middle school it seemed as though high school was so far away. Then when you finally got here, you had no idea what to do or where to go.

Moving from the middle school to the high school was a big transition period for many freshmen; finding classes was also a big problem for many students. Then just when you thought you could put away your school map, construction started. "I had lots of trouble finding my classes because of construction and the school being so big. Five minutes just didn't seem like enough time to get to where I wanted to go," said Chassity Thomas.

Another new freshman dilemma was dealing with making new friends. However, not all freshmen had this problem. "Most of my friends were upper classmen anyway, so making friends wasn't a problem for me," said Mindy Colvard.

Although things were rough for some and easier for others, most everyone had their ups and downs. Being a freshman was a period of adjustments and new beginnings. As your freshmen year came to a close, you could look forward with anticipation to your remaining years at Plainfield High.

Sophomore truggles

The sophomore year some said was the hardest year in a student's educational career. Now familiar with the school and with one year under their belts, these second year students were ready.

Sophomores had more choice in classes, as now a greater number of electives were open to them. One new opportunity was to combine history and English and take CHAP. This class offered a challenge and change of pace.

"I believe the most difficult thing concerning CHAP is trying to limit the amount of things I want to say, to fit a certain fixed time limit. As a Republican there's so much to say, "said Leland Ping.

More responsibilities were in store. for sophomores. Students had to learn how to balance different activities such as work, school and sports.

"It's kinda tough, but we handle sports and schoolwork pretty well," said Mike Ellis. Jobs were one activity that took extra time. Although some students had worked before, often time 10th grade was the first employment opportunity. While exciting, it was also hard work.

"It's tiring and it's not exactly easy either, but it's money," said Becca Stanfield.

Jobs and school weren't the only big things to roll around - it was time for driver's ed. "Driver's ed was all right. It was pretty fun and I had a great time," said Janet Proctor.

This was a year the sophomore class would never forget. By Stephanie Johnson

It was 10:00 a.m. on a Saturday morning, do you know where you were? At home asleep, right. No, I don't think so. Try at Ben Davis or some other school taking what could have been the most stressful test of your life, the ACT or SAT.

For most juniors the hardest part of preparing for college was taking one, if not both tests. Others realized that the SAT and ACT were not the be all and end all when applying for college. Whether they were concerned or not, after taking the tests, it was time to start choosing colleges and filling out applications.

A small amount of students decided in their freshman and sophomore years where they wanted to go, but for most students the worst was yet to come. "Very few people are born knowing what they want to do for a living," said Mrs. McCormick, counselor, "but most parents and schools expect their students to make these difficult decisions without adequate information."

We were lucky; we had guidance and the career center to help us. When summer came it was time to fill out all those long applications.

Whether the most difficult part of preparing for college was taking the SAT and ACT, choosing which colleges were best for you, or wading through pages of applications; most juniors went through the hassle because in the end it was worth it. When their junior year ended, the majority of prep work was done, now for the hardest part, graduating. By Alex Friedman fən-d-íg: a quantíty of materíal resources avaílable as a source of supply.

"I want to get a track scholarship, but if that doesn't work out, I'll go through the army," said senior Blake Greene discussing his future and how he would pay for it. Some of us were college bound; others were still undecided. For many students, college seemed somewhat of a problem because of lack of money. Money for college wasn't the only problem. There were plenty of other expenses that took away the little income we brought in. The uncertainty of how to obtain the needed money for dates, clothes, food, cars and school seemed to be a problem faced by many students. It wasn't always easy to get the funding.

"Did you want fries with that?"

There's an easier way to get through college.

There was a time when a part-time job could finance a college education. Today, you need the assistance of Bank One. We're one of the largest sources of student loans in the nation, so chances are we'll have a loan that's just right for your needs. So if you're trying to figure out how to pay for college, see us. Our loans come with everything you'll need. Except fries.

Whatever it takes. Member FDIC
